Top Weight Loss Mistakes

Are you looking to lose a few pounds? Hoping to slim down by the holidays? As you begin your weight loss program, be sure to avoid these top weight loss mistakes.

NOT ENOUGH PATIENCE

Experts recommend dropping only one to two pounds per week. This means that if you are hoping to slim down by, say 30 pounds, you'll have four to six months before you hit that goal. Patience is a virtue—and it also helps you lose weight in a healthy manner. Expecting immediate weight loss is unrealistic, unhealthy and can be discouraging to the point of making you quit your weight loss program.

NOT ENOUGH TIME

Start by scheduling into your day time for exercise and meal planning. Treat these times as appointments that you can't miss. Look at your exercise time as a reward, not a punishment, by choosing a type of exercise and a place to exercise that you really enjoy. You'll find that you will look forward to this time of your day.

NOT ENOUGH FOOD

Eating a well, balanced, healthy and low-fat diet is the best approach to weight loss. Starving yourself is not. If you don't eat enough each day, your plan will actually backfire. By doing this, your metabolism will slow down too much, making it harder for you to drop those pounds.

NOT ENOUGH OPTIMISM

You should be doing this for you, not for your spouse, your mother, or to spite your ex-boyfriend. You need a firm resolve to change the daily habits you have that do not help with your weight loss. Finally, ignore the scale for a while, forget the weight and concentrate on the results.

Thoughts from Tim Puliz

I take things for granted. Not every single thing, not all of the time – but, still too many things, too much of the time. You know that feeling that you get when some event jars you into the NOW of life? Yep, we've all been there; whether we want to go or not.

It could be a health scare for you or one your cherish, a car accident, or maybe the loss of power (whether it's the electric kind or the personal kind), but it is something that stops you in your tracks.

When it's a biggie, our hearts race, our minds try to keep up, and suddenly so many things we deemed super-important an hour ago are inconsequential now.

It's when the "we are but a grain of sand" analogy gleams crystal clear. It sure is humbling when you are thonked over your figurative noggin with the fact that – despite all you've been taught, seen and experienced over the years – you still allowed yourself to assume life would move forth in the easy-going, comfortable way that it had been.

The following quote by an anonymous author is a reminder of this: Measure wealth not by the things you have, but by the things you have for which you would not take money.

We are running a business here, that I don't deny, but your trust and patronage really are priceless to us. It's why I come to work with a smile, gratitude and an insatiable eagerness.

Let this month of October be filled with a bountiful harvest of appreciation, and may we all reap and cherish the "now" moments (large and small) that each day brings. Oh, and should that include some "fun size" Snicker Bars on the 31st, so be it!

Scaredy Cats and Frightened Fidos

Halloween is a fun holiday, as long as your family stays safe. This includes your furry friends. To keep your pets comfortable and safe, instead of scared, keep these tips in mind.

1. Unless your pet really loves wearing a costume, skip it this year. Putting on a costume can cause undue stress. If you are dressing your pet up, make sure the costume is safe. There should be no parts that restrict his ability to breathe, meow, or bark. Also watch closely for allergies to the costume material.
2. Costumes for pets, children, and adults often have small decorations on them. Make sure that nothing is on your or your pet's costume that could cause your animal to choke.
3. During trick-or-treating activities, keep your pet in a separate room away from the front door. All those costumed goblins and ballerinas can cause your pet stress. This also will keep your cat or dog from escaping out the front door.
4. Remember that the candy is for humans only. Chocolate especially is very dangerous for dogs and cats. The artificial sweetener xylitol is also harmful. If your pet does ingest something toxic, call your veterinarian or the ASPCA Animal Poison Control Center at (888) 426-4435.

Travel Tip

If the airline loses your luggage, you will need to fill out a form detailing each item that was in your bag. If you are packing any items that carry a significant value, it is helpful to have a list of what was in your luggage. For items that are particularly valuable, you may be asked to provide a receipt. So if you are carrying these types of items in your check-ins, you should carry a list and copies of receipts in your carry-on bag. If you bought valuable items at your destination, keep these new receipts as well. You can also photograph the contents of your bag, but it is not a given that the airlines will accept this as a good description.

Memory Storage

Although an attic can be great for extra storage space, take care with what you put up there. Clothing, many household items, toys, and other durable items will do fine in an attic. But since the temperature fluctuates so much, do not store books, videos, or photographs in your attic. The extreme cold and heat can destroy them.

Preventing Falls

As you or your loved ones get older, you begin to be concerned about the potential of an injury-producing fall. Simply getting older is not a cause of falling. There are many other factors that can lead to this type of injury. In order to reduce the risk of falling, keep these tips in mind.

KEEP IN SHAPE

A regular program of exercise can keep you strong and healthy. It improves coordination and balance and reduces weakness in your muscles. Ask your doctor about the best exercise program for you.

MAKE YOUR HOME SAFE

About half of all falls among the elderly happen at home. Remove items from walkways that are tripping hazards. Never leave anything on stairs. Make sure that these areas are well lit and have handrails. Throw rugs should be secured with carpet tape or removed. Place frequently used items within reach. Place non-slip mats in the shower and tub. And don't forget to wear shoes that have a non-slip sole, fit securely, and have good support.

TALK TO YOUR DOCTOR

Have your health care provider review your medication. Some medications, or combinations of drugs, can lead to drowsiness or dizziness. Be sure to tell your doctor about any over-the-counter drugs you are taking as well. You should also have your eyesight checked frequently by an eye doctor.

7 THINGS YOU CAN DO TO PREVENT IDENTITY THEFT

1. PROTECT YOURSELF AGAINST SPYWARE

Spyware is malware downloaded to your computer or website, without your knowledge or consent, that runs in the background and collects information about you: * Make sure whatever anti-virus program you're running on your personal computers includes spyware protection, as well. Some companies, such as Lavasoft or STOPzilla, will offer a basic anti-spyware service for free, while charging for advanced protection.

2. USE CAUTION WHEN ENTERING INFO ONLINE

When providing personal or financial information online, be certain that you have a secure connection. The URL in the address bar should change from "http" to "https" or "shttp." A closed padlock symbol also often indicates that the connection is secure.

3. CREATE STRONG PASSWORDS

We realize that generating strong passwords, not to mention keeping track of them all, can be a hassle, but it's critical that you have strong passwords for every site you use. You may also want to check out pwdhash.com. When you visit a site that requires you to create a password, enter a simple password you'll remember, but before you submit it, run the PwdHash browser extension (Firefox or Chrome), and it will invisibly generate a custom, strong password for that site. In the end, you only need to remember one password, which your browser is able to securely transform into a different, strong password for each site you use.

4. USE DISCRETION WHEN SHARING INFORMATION

Use discretion when updating social media websites. Even if you limit the number of people who have access to your profile, tweets, etc., keep in mind that the information is still published online and can be copied and pasted elsewhere. If anyone asks you for personal information, make sure they are who they claim to be and that there is a legitimate reason for the request.

5. STOP UNSOLICITED, "PRE-APPROVED" CREDIT OFFERS

Opt out of pre-screened credit/insurance offers to prevent potential thieves from intercepting and accepting the offers in your name. Opting out doesn't affect your eligibility for credit or insurance; visit OptOutPrescreen.com for more information.

6. SHRED CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

When disposing of papers with account numbers or other identifying information, shred them. This includes convenience checks that come with your credit card statement, as well as unsolicited credit card offers.

7. REMAIN VIGILANT: Review Your Accounts Regularly
Monitor your accounts online frequently, so you can discover potential issues without having to wait for bills or statements to come by mail.

History of the Jack O'Lantern

The tradition of the Jack O'Lantern began, surprisingly enough, with a turnip. Legend has it that in Ireland there lived an unhappy, mean old man called Stingy Jack. He often stole turnips from gardens in the village where he lived and could be seen carrying them around at night. Stingy Jack often played tricks on his neighbors and was generally avoided.

The story goes that one night, the Devil himself came to visit Stingy Jack. Jack offered the Devil some apples from his tree, but told the Devil he had to climb the tree to pick them himself. The Devil climbed high up in the tree. Stingy Jack quickly pulled several crosses from behind his back and placed them around the tree. The Devil was stuck in the tree and Jack told him he would stay there until he promised not to take Jack's soul. The Devil finally agreed, climbed down the tree and left Jack.

Several years later, Stingy Jack died. He went to Heaven, but could not get in past the Pearly Gates. St. Peter turned him away, telling him he was too mean and miserable to enter Heaven. Jack went down to Hell, but the Devil kept his promise to not take his soul and turned him away as well. This left Jack with no where to go and he was now in utter darkness outside the gates of Hell. Jack happened to have a turnip in his hands when he died, as he was stealing it from a field, and he now carried it with him. He begged the Devil for a light and was thrown a burning ember from the depths of Hell. He then placed it into the turnip. From that time onward, Stingy Jack roamed the earth with his "Jack O'Lantern" carved from the turnip he carried.

The Irish carried on the traditions in this legend by carving out turnips, gourds, and even potatoes, and placing a lighted candle inside them to keep Stingy Jack away on all Halloween's Eve, the night before All Saints Day. Thus began the tradition of the Halloween jack-o-lantern. Irish immigrants brought this tradition to American and soon began using pumpkins because they were larger and easier to carve.
